When your screening invite arrives, don't let it slip to the bottom of your list.

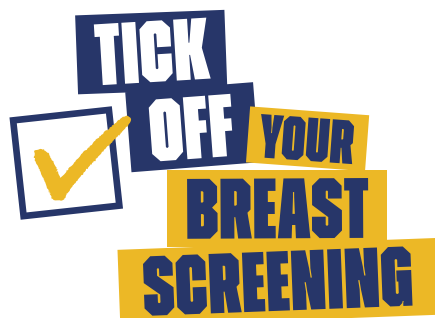

Tick off your breast screening

NHS breast screening is offered to women aged 50 to 71. Everyone registered with a GP as female will be invited.

NHS breast screening uses X-rays, called mammograms, to look for cancers that are too small to see or feel. Mammograms are always carried out by a female member of staff and only take a few minutes. The whole appointment should take no more than 30 minutes.

When you'll be invited

You'll automatically get your first invitation for breast screening between the ages of 50 and 53. You'll then be invited every 3 years until your 71st birthday.

If you're transgender or non-binary and would like to be invited for breast screening, ask your GP surgery for advice.

You need to be registered with a GP surgery to be invited for breast screening.

Not had a letter inviting you for breast screening?

If you have not been invited for breast screening by the age of 53 and think you should have, contact your local breast screening service.

Check your breasts every month. See your GP if you're worried about any symptoms, even if you've recently had breast screening. Do not wait for your next breast screening appointment.
